Processes: A list of common processes used in a recipe, containing details such as : Name, Order Number and Description. Formulations: A list of standard formulations used in a recipe, containing details such as : Name, Recipe ID, Formulation ID and Formulation ID. Labels: The collection of labels used in a recipe. Labels consist of a name, a text, a color, a position and a link. Labels can be placed on the physical products or on the container. Master Records: This table contains information about the master recipes for a particular Recipe Type.Q: An extension of Proposition 4.1 of "Heraldry: Structure, Meaning, History and Usage" The proposition 4.1 of the book Heraldry: Structure, Meaning, History and Usage by Dickson et al. is the following. 4.1 The root of every vowel is a lateral. 4.2 The word of a root is shorter than its adjective or substantive. I am trying to prove a generalization of the above proposition. 4.2 The word of a vowel is shorter than its adjective or substantive. I have proved this for letter and diphthongs using the definition of the word. For example, if the word is α , and if the word is a diphthong, then the root has 2 letters. If the word is the diphthong α , then the root has 3 letters. This is what I have proven for single-letter words. For the letter i , let the root be α_i , the word is α . The word has 2 letters, so $\alpha_1d6a3396d6$
