What's New In Group Policy ADM Files?

An ADM file is an administrative template for the Group Policy Object Editor (GPE). It consists of a .adm file and an .adml file. The .adm file is the .adm template with all the data required by the GPE to manage registry-based policy settings. The .adml file is the .adml template, which is generated by the .adm file and specifies a default value for the .adm file. The .adml file contains data that is used by the GPE to determine the default setting that the user will use if the value in the .adm file is not specified. Adm Files are the administrative templates used by Group Policy to customize the user interface. These templates are used to create user interface components such as the Computer Configuration page in the Group Policy Object Editor. They are similar to Group Policy Objects in that they can contain Group Policy settings for a user, computer, or computer group and the template takes care of the details of applying the settings. With the appearance of Windows Server 2008 and Windows Server 2003, the ADM files have changed. These changes include the addition of several new ADM files as well as some renaming of existing ADM files. Get the most up to date and easiest to use ADM files.
