Neuropeptide-Y levels in the hypothalamus of cycling rats: correlation with serum levels of progesterone, estradiol and LH. Plasma levels of progesterone (P), estradiol (E), LH and neuropeptide-Y (NP-Y) have been determined during a 48 h cycle in rats at different times of day and night. In the morning of the 3rd cycle, NP-Y levels in the hypothalamus significantly increased as compared to morning levels of the 1st and 2nd cycle. Serum P showed a significant increase at night of the 3rd cycle. These changes are correlated with the circadian variations of NP-Y found in the 3rd cycle of the 1st and 2nd cycle. These data show that NP-Y levels in
