CD96, an antigen that distinguishes a subset of acute myelogenous leukemia cells with stem cell characteristics. We have studied the expression of CD96 on acute myelogenous leukemia (AML) cells to determine whether this antigen may represent a potential surface marker for AML. CD96 was expressed on leukemia blasts from 38 of 55 patients with AML and was absent from bone marrow (BM) samples of 33 normal donors. The intensity of CD96 expression on leukemia cells was comparable to that on BM-derived cells. The proportion of leukemia cells staining CD96-positive varied from patient to patient but was always in the range of 50 to 80%. On the basis of CD96 staining, CD34 staining, and the lack of the myeloid markers CD13, CD33, and CD117, leukemic cells were assigned to the following 2 subpopulations: CD96(+)/CD34(-) (type I) and CD96(+)/CD34(+) (type II). Leukemic cells that belonged to the type II population were more likely to express markers of myeloid differentiation and CD34 expression but lacked the lineage-restricted markers CD56 and CD123. Leukemic cells that were negative for CD96 had a more undifferentiated phenotype, expressed CD56, CD123, and CD34, and had shorter survival than leukemia cells that were positive for CD96. Leukemic cells from patients treated with alkylating agents and/or cytosine arabinoside (Ara-C) were CD96(+) and had a shorter survival compared with CD96(-) leukemic cells. In summary, we found that CD96 represents a novel surface marker that distinguishes a subset of leukemia cells that have stem cell characteristics.

Custom-made-gettyimages.jpg Remember the iTunes store? Google Play? They were all music start-ups that rose to prominence to prove that there was a future in moving music from the store of one company to the store of another. We've said it before and we'll say it again: As companies like Google and Apple get bigger, they lose the ability to innovate at a global level. Instead, small businesses and startups have to team up to compete with them and win. Over at Matador Network, the publisher of the Quartz music blog, the editorial staff is the subject of a similarly big move, and it's happening in a bigger way. We'll be moving to a wholly-

Q: Using XHTML and Smarty in WordPress - correct syntax? I have a theme that I have built on WordPress. The theme is built with smarty but it uses xhtml which I have overridden with my own using wp_concerns() in my functions.php file. This is my first time using smarty, I have been given the task of adding a custom photo gallery to the theme. I can get it to display the image but when I scroll down the page the image loads underneath. I think this is because smarty is trying to output the php and not xhtml to the page. Any help would be greatly appreciated. Here is my code: {if $images} {cycle values=1 through=$images} {/cycle} {/if} I have also tried outputting xhtml like so: {cycle values=1 through=$images} {/cycle} A: Adding {config

`file=".."} will make sure the xhtml file is rendered correctly. In your case, you are using the built in theme template WordPress uses for rendering content. If`
