{"5", "0.5"}, {"10", "1.0"}, {"15", "1.5"}, {"20", "2.0"}, {"25", "2.5"}, {"30", "3.0"}; So you see, it does not have to be quite exact. There are no real field data, I only want the "problematic" areas on the graph. I want to obtain something like this (I know that the axes are not the same): Here I would like to add the errorbar to the plot. So far I have this: I have tried to enter the following, but it does not work:
VectorPlot[data, {x, 0, 30}, {y, 0, 2}, PlotRange -> {{0, 30}, {0, 4}},

2.0].Distribution of endosomal proteins Pecam-1 and CD31 (PECAM-1, CD31, SELL) in the endothelium in human atherosclerotic arteries. The purpose of this study was to determine the distribution of Pecam-1 and CD31 in atherosclerotic arteries. Endothelium-dependent responses to bradykinin (BK) are usually diminished in atherosclerotic arteries. Endosomal proteins Pecam-1 and CD31 are ligands for the leukocyte receptor integrin CD11/CD18 (PECAM-1, SELL, CD31). These proteins may be involved in the regulation of endothelial signal transduction in atherosclerosis. PECAM-1 is a membrane-bound receptor protein and CD31 is a 140-kDa transmembrane glycoprotein. We used double-label immunofluorescence and laser confocal microscopy to study the distribution of Pecam-1 and CD31 in human atherosclerotic arteries (n=3) compared to normal arteries (n=3). In normal arteries, Pecam-1 was expressed on the endothelial surface of all arterial segments. CD31 was expressed on the endothelial surface of one-third of the arterial segments. In atherosclerotic arteries, Pecam-1 was expressed on the endothelial cell surface of all arterial segments. CD31 was expressed on the endothelial cell surface of one-half of the arterial segments. These results demonstrate a redistribution of Pecam-1 and CD31 in human atherosclerotic arteries. The redistribution of Pecam-1 and CD31 in human atheroscler
