With the enormous support from the community, we have taken a giant step towards achieving the dreams of creating a VR game. We are highly motivated by the community's feedback and the very strong demands voiced in numerous requests. This game is for you, and we hope you will enjoy it as much as we enjoyed making it! The Community: In the moments after the announcement of the creation of Douarnenez VR, the community on Steam, on Youtube and other social networks burst into a very large expectation. To keep all our expectations met, we had to innovate, and that is the reason we have developed Douarnenez VR, and we can promise players: it will be absolutely new! This game is offered with the Deep Immersion System from IMVR. Deep Immersion: A deep immersion is when you have a full perspective of the environment and its people as if you were there, that is to say, all the space is under your control, and you can walk around freely. The edges of the screen are invisible and do not move with the change of your viewpoint, and when you look at them, they react with the 3D model of the environment, just as if you were in the game. In order to be able to do this, the image is a first-person view of the model, so as soon as your vision is directed at a new point on the screen, the model moves and responds to your movements. This immersion system thus allows a very unusual but completely tangible experience where the player is truly in the game and can interact

Qi Yi of First Play was positive in his review, calling it "a 24-track soundtrack that has the ability to get the viewer's mind into the groove of the playing of Xinjiang folk songs and chorus", believing that Yan Song's performance on the piano scenes was awe-inspiring. Steve Wartell from Cinema Source was less positive, writing in his review that "the soundtrack is a mixed one, with bland rock-pop music, and any hint of the folk songs is quickly lost in the overwhelmingness of the beat", and criticising the orchestra's performance. Taiwan-based Chinese music publication Zhongguo Music went further in its criticisms, describing Together: A Wish No One Remembers Soundtrack as "the most pitiful and lacking in heart production in recent Chinese soundtrack history". According to this publication, the soundtrack has two songs that can only be heard in the film, only one which is not composed by the film's composer, and two other pieces that are deemed to be "superfluous at best" and are even "palpably offensive at worst". Track listing Week-1.01 Shanzhai () - 3:18 Original

A few weeks ago, a disaster occurred in the city... The innocent citizens of Aiiia were trapped in a cave in which they were held prisoner. Their terrible screams can be heard everywhere. Many years have passed since then. Will the day finally come when the citizens will be rescued? Or perhaps, the screams will only grow louder and louder? This is the story of a young girl who will answer the cries of those in distress with the help of a grand machine. Together with her loyal companion a robot named "Cor". These two will break the barriers of this world and reach the "Aiiia of the Past" to free the innocent souls held captive in there. You wake up in a bathtub. A doctor is speaking to you through a speaker, urging you to get your bearings in a place you do not recognize, while it's obvious to you that you are in a hospital of some sort. You're fine and even though you clearly remember only a short while before waking up, you have no memory of the events that brought you to this place. You are told that you might be in a coma. Why are you in a hospital? Is it because of someone you met? Will someone care about you? Who was your friend? What happened? Why? As you start to ask yourself these questions, you start to remember fragments of what led to your current situation and the realization of your current predicament sets in. There are still some things you do not know, the doctor starts to speak, but you don't hear what he's saying, you're getting lost in your thoughts. He stops talking. Perhaps you really are in a coma and you're just not awake. In this journey you will have to fix all of the characters you encountered along the way, to create an eternal world with their own stories and problems. Use classic mechanics and use your brain to create these characters to create a beautiful whole universe, and you can even create them out of nothing. Your decisions and your actions will guide the story, which is of course going to have dramatic consequences: good or bad, major or small. You will have to decide which actions to take, and you will have to understand how those decisions have consequences and what the consequences will be. Each time you pick up a leaf from the ground, you will get a fragment of information. You will be learning more and more about the universe, and thus a new layer of story will reveal
