Logalizer exposes a convenient way to send data to a callback function. With the use of the callback method we can avoid the manual parsing of log entries by instantiating a new Logalizer object and writing to its $_GET array. This method doesn't require any extra parameters as an argument for the $callback function. * Logalizer can call your callback function automatically via GET/POST requests, in case that you would like to add a new feature to Logalizer that requires the execution of a script when data is obtained from the log entry. * PHP options (useragent, cookies,...) can be passed in order to define the environment and what data should be used to execute the callback function. # Support for various web servers.(Modified in 1.0) * Logalizer supports the following web servers: * Apache * IIS (COM application) * Microsoft HTTP server * NginX * ProFTPD * Lighttpd * RoundCube # Support for various Web Applications.(Modified in 1.0) * Logalizer support PHP applications that are based on WebDAV (via DAVd Lite) or Document Management System (via DAVm Lite). * There are also two options to import XML log files directly or to first check a header value associated with a log file. * PHP options (useragent, cookies,...) can be passed in order to define the environment and what data should be used to import the log file. * Most log file formats that support the XML encoding are supported.
