What is the point of using the class with this casting. Check out the following video as an example: A: In your example the type of Bot is class in this case WordBot, so you need to cast to this type. An example: if (reply.Type == typeof(WordBot)) { //... } This is a brief, easy to read summary of a LESSON I have learned from a fabulous conversation with my friend, Darja Breitman. Which is all I'll say, really, because there's not that much to say about this, is there? It's a conversation, a common question, and a simple, important answer. It takes time for us to start thinking about what we want to be, and Darja and I have the privilege of speaking with one another about it frequently. This conversation took place only a couple of weeks ago, but I've known Darja for years, so it's no surprise to me that we still have so much to learn. To be more specific, it was about our work, how we can both define it, and how we can both find ourselves doing work we love. The conversation we had was over Skype; it was about an hour and a half long, and really made me think. Darja has a deep, well-articulated understanding of her own work. She's worked with social media and communications consultants for a long time, and knows her industry in a lot of ways. She talked to me about the importance of finding a career path that speaks to your purpose, but also your personality. I admire Darja's work ethic and dedication. When I first became aware of her, she was already a well-known content creator. She was working to get noticed, and she worked very hard to gain traction. She's also incredibly successful at what she does, and took the time to give me one specific piece of advice: find a career you love, and work hard. She's a perfectionist, and isn't afraid to say so, but every piece of advice she gives comes with the intent to help you. I admire Darja's work ethic and dedication. When I first became aware of her, she was already a well-known content creator. She was working to get noticed, and she worked very
