The EGFR mutation (exon 19 deletion) in oral squamous cell carcinoma (OSCC) is related to poor prognosis. In Caucasians, an EGFR polymorphism (rs71282959; 4150G>A) is associated with responsiveness to gefitinib. The aim of the study was to investigate the prevalence of this polymorphism in Japanese OSCC patients who were also treated with gefitinib. DNA was extracted from paraffin-embedded specimens of the biopsied tongue tumors of 44 Japanese patients with OSCC. The 4150G>A polymorphism was detected using the restriction fragment length polymorphism (RFLP) method. The relationship between the results of the RFLP and clinicopathological factors was analyzed. The EGFR mutation was confirmed in seven out of 44 (15.9%) cases by direct sequencing. Genotyping data for the 4150G>A polymorphism revealed a prevalence of 51.1% (n = 23) for G and 48.9% (n = 21) for A. No statistically significant difference was found between the genotype and clinicopathological factors. The EGFR polymorphism was relatively common in Japanese OSCC patients who were treated with gefitinib, in the same range as that in Caucasian patients. These findings suggest that the EGFR polymorphism is not involved in OSCC tumorigenesis in Japanese patients.A FORMER SNP MP who sided with the Conservatives in last year's independence referendum has spoken out about the power struggle facing Scotland's political leaders. Speaking at an event this week, Margo was the guest of honour at the launch of
