skellington 1.1.0. no problem, however we are required to have at least one MD10 in order to do a. French Language Dictionary -in French-MD10. show another method to fix it, maybe you can use the AxiConnecto ip core and activate it on the cases where the AxiConnecto will be in the same ethernet switch as the mailboxes (or if not disable it, just as a test). Thank you very much for the support, and also, thank you so much for the feedback, this is very kind of you and I am very grateful :D Dave, The scenario that I mentioned is actually not practical at all, since most of the FW updates happens overnight at the latest. So from a network perspective, this is all not too useful in my opinion. I was thinking of the scenario that I have been using. The problem of this scenario is that all the Core's are in a separate network, and the three proxy's, in a separate network. This network has a pass through port to the first Core, so it will not affect the three proxy's and the last Core. If the second Core becomes available, the third Proxy will ping the second Core, and that will not happen, because the two Core's have been isolated from each other on the second Core's perspective. What I am after is connectivity between all the Core's, and the proxying of data between the two sections. If one of the Cores goes down, I do not want to affect the connectivity, and I do not want to lose mail or other files. Also I would like to see if there is any way to reduce the two Cores in the middle to only one, so we are then using the two Core's instead of the three. Thank you for your time, and for all of the feedback. I really appreciate your help. A common way to troubleshoot network connectivity is to look at the routing table. Try out the command "route", and see if the IP addresses are local or remote, and if "gateway" is for a local address or a remote address. The way WAN routing works, is that each device has a routing table that it uses to update the routing table on the device it communicates with. This simplifies the process of talking to devices on different networks and multiple routers and switches, since only one device needs to know the complete, logical top
