None The present invention relates to a catheter for the incision, drainage, or lavage of abscesses, granulomas or other lesions in the body cavities or organs. The catheter is a short, flexible tubular member which can be advanced with facility into body cavities and can be used to incise or peel open the cavity to allow lavage or drainage of the cavity. The catheter also provides for irrigation of body cavities, such as the ear, throat or rectum. Catheters are used to drain body cavities or organs of fluid which is no longer in the normal flow of fluid from the cavity. Catheters may also be used to evacuate body cavities or organs of debris, such as calculi, casts, particulate matter, or other foreign bodies which will not be passed through the normal flow of body fluid. For example, catheters have been used to incise lesions in the ear in order to allow the drainage of pus or to remove foreign bodies such as calculi or grain. Catheters are also used to evacuate blood, pus, or other fluids from a lesion such as in the throat. Because of the invasive nature of catheterization, it is important that the catheter not be accidentally withdrawn from the body cavity or organ which it is being used to drain. The catheter should be small enough in diameter to be advanced into such a cavity or organ, but large enough to deliver irrigation, medicaments or to remove the debris being evacuated. To allow the passage of fluid from a cavity without using a catheter, wounds are sometimes incised to drain the cavity. An open wound will not heal without medication or other intervention, however, if the wound is large, it may cause undesirable swelling or infection. In the case of the ear, the incision can expose the patient to infection from other pathogens which can enter through the skin. Further, the incision may be large enough to require drainage tubes which must be sutured at frequent intervals to the skin. The use of small catheters or probes which have been introduced into body cavities has been proposed as a less invasive technique than incision to provide drainage or to evacuate foreign bodies. U.S. Pat. Nos. 4,583,539 and 4,927,414 describe devices for inserting a small, flexible tubular member into a body cavity or organ. Catheters of this type may be used to remove fluid or foreign bodies, as well

Thursday, July 15, 2013 Broccoli is almost as hard to eat as kale and bok choy...at least the first time I tried. I guess that's what happens when you have a severe fruit allergy. Does all that broccoli taste like it's been crying? I don't think so! Today I made a delicious fall/holiday/wintery salad with broccoli and canned salmon. I used cherry tomatoes, grape tomatoes and pear tomatoes. It was soooo good! I also had roasted broccoli on Thursday night that was fall-er than a pumpkin! It made me think of this salad. Hazelnut Chicken 1/2 inch slices fresh ginger 1/2 cup hazelnut spread 1/4 cup rice wine vinegar 2 Tbsp. honey 1/2 cup soy sauce 1/2 tsp. sesame oil 4 chicken breasts Peel your ginger. Make four incisions in the chicken breasts. Mix the remaining ingredients in a bowl and stir it in to your chicken. Put into a baking dish and bake at 450 degrees for 35 minutes. Sauce for the chicken is pretty easy, but tastes like it took longer than 35 minutes to make. I used a plastic tray with a lid. This time, the April release is subtitled -- or rather, the box art is subtitled with -- "Extended & Remastered." You can also read the press release, view the trailer and get more information about the release. Sarnak says: "I've found a limited edition box set at the Buffalo Central Public Library that features the entire 40-minute original theatrical cut. It was made available in 2004 and it's never been seen for sale before now. It's the original release element and an essential part of this film for a
