The app developers argued that the link was unrelated to any of the app's content, and that the app was merely "mentioning" the game's website. However, that argument didn't hold up, and Google clearly sees the link as marketing a third-party site, even if it isn't a direct ad. This change will likely make it harder for an app to "mention" a game site within its app, or for a game site to link back to an app. It will most likely make it harder for game sites to pay for app marketing through the Android Market. I don't understand why it's hard to distinguish between "mention" and "promote." I'm sure this issue has come up in the past, and Google has always made the distinction in the past, but now there's a new policy that provides more clarity. ----- mattdes! Obviously this is not a problem for Google because they're the platform providers. If you want to use these APIs on any site, you're going to have to be mindful of the new policy. ~~~ greenduchen This is exactly the point I was trying to make. The developer is only allowed to mention a game in its content if it's actually _relevant_ to the content of the app. From the developer's perspective, "mention" could mean "promote" or "advertise." In the new policy, Google is now effectively saying "promotion" is also considered "advertising." ~~~ petervandijck Then why not just call it advertising? It's no worse than that. But yes, it doesn't

Free online downloadable book Principles Of Marketing Global And Southern African Perspectives Pdf Download : Download Principles Of Marketing Global And Southern African Perspectives Pdf Download For Yourlf you've ever driven in Palm Beach or Miami, you've seen them. They're on every block. They're the obnoxious, halting-breath, red-light-stopping, lights-and-sirens cop cars. If you're pulled over by one of these guys, and you are an active member of the ACLU, don't be surprised if they call 911 and demand emergency assistance. But if you're not a ACLU member, you might be nervous. Like I said, these guys are quite aggressive. They don't take kindly to anyone who won't answer their questions. And they love to talk, talk, talk. It's their favorite hobby in the world. According to the IRS, two of the most common "occupations" that use the 501c3 tax exemption are government contractors and churches. The latter is a bit of an oxymoron, since churches are supposed to be non-profit, right? You might have heard of some of these political gurus. For example, there's David Lapp, whose radio ads and television spots have been all over the place for years. And Paul Daugherty has that million-dollar voice that's good for leading political debates. And then there's Mark McKinnon, AKA Frank Luntz. And you'll never guess what his occupation is. I'm not going to dwell on the whole "Occupation" thing. Whatever you think about it, you've seen the ads, right? If you aren't aware of what these guys do, you can't say that you've been misled by these commercials. But you do have a little different problem, since you aren't a member of the organization. All of these clubs are organized under the umbrella of the Free Beacon, which is a major player in the GOP. And the Free Beacon doesn't have to pay taxes, since it's non-profit. Do the two organizations have a mutual relationship? You bet they do. Paul Daugherty has previously conducted focus groups for the Free Beacon, including a winter/spring 2010 hunt test in West Virginia. And the Beacon funds the Center for Effective Lawmaking, which pays Lapp 0cc13bf012
