that her policies would lead to such benefits and when she managed to mention an inconvenient policy but mentioned it in passing. The same was true of her attack on a high level Swedish minister's remarks about media freedom. This is a hugely-sensitive issue and when Sweden's finance minister, Anders Borg, had objected to any attempts to curtail the Swedish media's freedom and called for more free speech he was pilloried. But the Prime Minister could barely mention his remarks and there was no mention of the censorship of newspapers in Russia – a country she has just visited. The Local Affairs Minister, Kris Hopkinson, added nothing to the debate. He was reported in the Evening Standard to have suggested that the Prime Minister was campaigning to win the Scottish and Welsh elections, where he was expected to do well. This totally undermined his role in the debate and meant we learned nothing about what Labour's policy was for Scotland. The National Assembly for Wales Opposition Leader, Vaughan Gething, fared little better. He talked about how his wife had been made to leave, or be removed from, her local council for being gay and about his work on his election campaign but he could not mention the Labour Party. There was no evidence of any Welsh Labour policy except a vaguely-worded commitment to a devolved parliament and he offered nothing by way of analysis, rebuttal or assessment of any of the Scottish and Welsh leaders' positions. The Welsh Energy Minister and a member of the House of Lords, Lord Elis-Thomas, should also have been excused. He complained about his green energy policies, his analysis of the UK's energy future and his condemnation of his party's failed policies. He was said to have been flown in by helicopter and was also accompanied by two bailiffs. The Home Affairs Minister, Oonagh McDevitt, was also a hot topic of talk and complaint on the BBC's Question Time programme. She had brought a group of people with her, including a woman named Faith Harris, apparently a supporter of the Christian Socialist Movement, to give a parliamentary answer from them. There was much patronising commentary about the need for "young people" to be represented and "people from all kinds of communities". The young women were left alone to be berated and criticised but their assertions were overruled with Labour supporters being instructed to "hold their ground".

I started to get a bit bored of the constant stream of updates to any of my friends who are in Long Island, namely, Sandy survivors in the Rockaways. I was tempted to turn off the "friend" function on my friend's updates — apparently that's a crime. I didn't though, and that's why I am on this site right now, reading your post about the push to connect the Rockaways with more power lines. I am glad that you posted this since I was thinking about turning off my friend's updates for the time being. A lot of people are hurt, but it seems like a lot of people are also angry about it as well. I think turning off a friend's updates would be a good idea too.
