The year is 2745. The Earth has been on a collision course with a space transport ship named Starboost. Since the times of ancient Chinese astronomers, people have been trying to dodge this giant alien vessel. In 2131, the Earth was hit by a missile from the giant vessel, which damaged and partially destroyed the Earth. And now, Earth is on the brink of complete annihilation. You play as the starboost crewman and you must hitch a ride in the ship. There are 3 types of crew: driver, pilot, and mechanic. The mission is to enter the hollowed out spaceship and collect the four energy orbs on the way. The game features a variety of puzzle and platform game elements such as platforming, speed running, and vehicle racing. In the game the player controls a crewman who rides through space on the Starboost. There are three types of vehicles available: Red, Blue, and Orange. Each vehicle comes equipped with an energy item of that color. There are also a variety of powerups available to increase the speed and attack ability of the player character. What's new:

. Photo courtesy LightRocket/Conde Nast To support Womenkind, Joni Mitchell lived in a one-bedroom apartment in Vancouver, with a fixer-upper house behind a stinky chemical plant in Seattle, and an old Victorian in Burlington, Vt. She never had a vacation, though she received multiple writing awards. She worked eighty hours a week. Her only friends were people she'd met through her music. When she wanted to make a record, she did it herself, spending weeks and months in her closet, surrounded by low-energy lighting and one Egham microscope. After she released Love Crimes and stopped touring, her manager said, "Go home. You're not wired to be around people." She realized she was an old-fashioned romantic; after doing a string of live performances, she'd get to her dressing room topless and high—"that would be the end of it, she couldn't get out of bed," a close friend said—and accept her own mortality when her heart stopped in a car. Once, she borrowed a guy's electric razor to shave her legs, thinking it would make her feel more real. "It was that or actual sex," she said. "It really doesn't seem like I had much of a relationship life." The day after One Woman received the William Goldman prize for an extraordinary body of work, Mitchell took a cab in Toronto to a children's store on Bloor Street to buy a school set of magnetic letters, the kind she used as a teenager. Chris said: "'Is this what you're wearing today?' 'Don't look at me like that.' She laughed, but then she stopped smiling." A director who was trying to get her to audition for the William Goldman prize said, "Joni's a superhero. A rock star." She told a friend she felt like an afterthought, a footnote, and that her last chance to be someone she used to be was to get to an A.V. nomination. She wrote a song about the A.V.s, called “Love Crimes,” when the election was still open—“for the minimum public support, I hope,” she said—and a publisher agreed to buy it for a few dollars. It was nine minutes
