The depth of field effect is mostly used as a stylistic effect in photography and film. During the 18th century there were several experiments to create a practical device that could produce the effect. The first realistic simulation was introduced by F. W. Escher during his book Hieroglyphen published in 1936. The technique was later adapted to computer graphics by Miyazaki Masakazu in 1981. With the introduction of the ray tracing techniques in the 1990s the way of creating realistic simulations was opened to CG artists. They were soon joined by other artists such as Thomas Boutell who taught them how to be creative and to use the environment. It was not long until 3D packages such as Cinema4D, Maya and The Foundry introduced their own ray tracing technology and proved that it can be used for a large scale production. It is very important to develop your own workflow by experimenting. Be sure to try all sorts of plugins and camera setups and pay attention to the details! Out of focus Out of Focus is a fast version that works without depth information. It creates a blur with constant radius over the complete image and is a good complement to 'Depth of Field'. It offers some extra functionality as well. It's possible to use a custom drawn lens in addition to the generateable ones. Out of Focus also offers background distortion for semi transparent areas.
