Snes9x is the clear victor in the battle for the ultimate SNES emulator. Its among the most compatible of any SNES emulator its capable of running even the later Super Famicom releases and also comes equipped with a ton of great features that have been continually honed and refined over the years, such as image upscaling, video filters, cheats, and online multiplayer. The Turbo Mode is another awesome feature for power leveling and fast-forwarding through games that seem to move along at a snails pace. Ports include everything from Windows and MacOS to mobile versions for iOS and Android. SNES9X is also available as a core for RetroArch, should you choose to use it over bsnes-mercury. Jeff Gerstmann from GameSpot gave the game a 7.1 out of 10. [4] Gerstmann has praised the game for the innovative touch-screen based controls, the Mario-themed environments and hazards in the courts and the game's graphics, though has criticized the game for its lack of content, the repetitive single player mode, the lack of variety of sound clips and animations, and the lack of online play, where the download play has only tedious minigames. He has recommended the game to people who wish to play in local multiplayer modes, but has advised for solo players to ignore the title due to lack of longevity. Aaron Kaluszka of Nintendo World Report gave the game a 7.5 out of 10. [5] He has stated that the game feels awkward at first that it controls entirely with the touchscreen, though has remarked that after a few minutes of play, the controls start to feel intuitive. He has additionally praised the game's graphics and sound, calling the presentation fun. Some criticisms of the game he has was with the game AI, saying that the game feels like Mario Hoops 3-on-3 often plays more like Mario Hoops 1-on-3. as AI teammates dont really do much besides stand around waiting for a pass. and the game's multiplayer, limited to only two player offline play and four player support only being available in Mario Party style minigames. 5ec8ef588b
