I think it just allows the user to pay in that method using their Paytm account. I'm not sure, as I haven't actually used this. Nope. Although you can go to the bank and buy Rupee in their exchange option, you can't withdraw cash. And you can't use this anywhere except the Lokpal and Delhi police station, where you can pay with Rupees. I don't think you can use this anywhere else. How can you use this website for your site? Can you make money from it? I want to know.Q: How to separate laravel project into multiple projects I need to separate my laravel project into multiple projects. For example, the main project is client management system with CRUD interface. So when I save data to the database, I need to automatically send data to the server and receive information about the server from the server, and update server database. So I need to separate the part about sending and receiving data into the server-side and the part about update database into another project, which is the part about updating database. So I need to understand how to separate laravel project into multiple projects, like database, the part that send and receive data and the part that update database. A: You can make a separate PHP file for each project. If you are using homestead (which I highly recommend) use the root folder for your development (xampp/htdocs) In that folder make folders for each project src - this will contain all of your codes that you will be working on tests - this will contain your phpunit tests config - this will contain your database configuration public - this is where your website will be located You can run each project with a unique port number. So that you can run different localhost URL. For example, my project is called model-test I created a folder for it in the root mkdir model-test And in the model-test folder, I created my index.php (main file) <?php / * Created by PhpStorm. * User: henry * Date: 7
