A better-than-average data recovery software for Mac.1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a method of forming a plug used in an electrode included in a capacitor, and to a capacitor including a plug as described above. 2. Description of the Related Art Capacitors, which are of the kind used in DRAMs as represented by DRAMs having a capacity of about 1 G bits, must have a higher capacitance in order to meet the demand for high integration. Also, such capacitors must be made to have a smaller size in order to meet the demand for high integration. However, capacitors made by the general L-shaped molding method can be made only to have a smaller size in the horizontal direction. Thus, the problems are that the integration of DRAMs becomes difficult when the size of the capacitor is reduced. FIG. 1 shows an example of a capacitor to which the L-shaped molding method can be applied. In order to increase the capacitance of the capacitor shown in FIG. 1, it is necessary to dispose a cylindrical capacitor body 1 in close proximity to a plug 2. In this case, the length of the capacitor body 1 is about 10. μ m. In order to prevent parasitic capacitance from being generated between the capacitor body 1 and the plug 2, the width of a semiconductor device must be increased by at least 10. μ m. In order to increase the capacitance of the capacitor, the area of a capacitor dielectric film must be made to occupy a large part of the total surface area of a capacitor. In the event of using the L-shaped molding method, however, the area of the capacitor body 1, which can be increased by about 10. μ m, is already saturated. In other words, the area of the capacitor body 1 is substantially constant
