Aside from giving birth, few parents were interested in the process of learning to care for their newborn. This was a by-product of modern life, where the father and the mother were separated and where children were put in daycare and other children. Even a generation or two ago, if parents were not the partners in parenting, that meant that someone else was taking care of their children. The argument that the manual is for men is completely out of touch with reality. First, we all want our child to love us, and only parents can do that.
