The overall goal of this proposal is to use proteomics to identify new candidate genes that contribute to the highly sex-specific susceptibility to severe asthma in African-American children. Our overall hypothesis is that gender influences the pathogenesis of the asthma disease in part due to differential regulation of proteins in asthma-related pathways. For this project, we propose to utilize the sample and clinical data of our ongoing case-control study of asthma. We propose to combine proteomic analyses of serum from asthma subjects with different ethnic backgrounds and a genome wide association study using the same subjects to identify novel candidate genes in asthma.2012-13 Adelaide United W-League season The 2012-13 Adelaide United W-League season was the club's second season of association football and the second in the W-League, the premier competition for women's Sanders examined this problem with data from the Multinational Panel Study of Labour and Income. One hypothesis for why production is disproportionately split between two halves of the year has to do with the location and structure of firms. Sanders and Switzer located the "Parkchester industrial park" in New York City to study the relationship between the location and size of companies and where and how much work is done. Over 80% of the industrial park's employment is in over 3,000 mid-size manufacturing firms, which are located in areas with high manufacturing output relative to the nation as a whole. The concentration of mid-size firms in the area, along with the fact that these firms are more likely to operate "continuously through the workweek rather than operating on a piecework basis," means that the majority of workers in the park do work during the months of high activity, and work less in less productive months. Sanders and her colleagues also found that workers located in the park are comparatively less likely to be members of unions than workers in more unionised areas. Sanders' models tested the hypothesis that mid-size firms locate in order to take advantage of seasonal demand for products sold by smaller firms. The results of this study also indicated that a substantial portion of the drop in over time in firm-level output occurred despite the fact that the firms were intentionally located in an area where seasonal demand was higher overall. While the authors also tested the hypothesis that firms might move in the fall in order to take advantage of a favourable tax environment at the end of the year, none of their models demonstrated a strong relationship between the lack of a union and the location of firms in the industrial park. Academic influence on industry The Sanders family has a track record of making substantial contributions to a number of industries. For example, Elon Musk co-founded the internet and transport company PayPal with Peter Thiel. He is also the chairman and co-founder of SpaceX, the private spaceflight company. More recently, the company Neuralink is composed of some of the research done by the family at the Singularity University Graduate Summer Program and their lab
