Mumbai Police, Mumbai Scapular and glenohumeral joint kinematics during throwing of a tennis ball in a single toss. The etiology of rotator cuff pathology is complex and could be influenced by glenohumeral joint kinematics. Tennis is a popular sport with ball to shoulder contact occurring during the single toss. The aim of this investigation was to examine the scapular and glenohumeral joint kinematics of the throwing motion used in tennis. Descriptive laboratory study. A 3-dimensional goniometer was used to record 3-D scapular and glenohumeral joint kinematics of 11 young tennis players during a single ball toss. During the single toss, the scapula moved proximally and laterally by 17° and 12°, respectively, with combined external rotation and abduction to the scapular joint. Internal rotation and adduction were observed (with combined internal rotation and adduction) in the acromion and clavicle. The glenohumeral joint exhibited a complex pattern of motion, including abduction, adduction, internal rotation, external rotation, and scapular depression. The greatest scapular rotation occurred with abduction and external rotation of the humerus and external rotation of the scapula. Tennis players experience a unique combination of scapular and glenohumeral joint kinematics, which could lead to abnormal rotator cuff function. Further research is required to investigate the relationship between tennis players' throwing kinematics and rotator cuff pathology.Q: Write output value to a text file in C/C++ My C code is: for (int i=0; i

The impact of homocysteine levels on the severity and characteristics of ischaemic stroke: a review. High homocysteine level is associated with cardiovascular disease and risk of ischaemic stroke. It was suggested that homocysteine may be a causative rather than a non-causal risk factor in the pathogenesis of ischaemic stroke. This review of the literature was performed with the aim to quantify the strength of the association between homocysteine level and the severity and characteristics of ischaemic stroke. We searched MEDLINE, EMBASE and ICHUSSA databases from inception to September 2007 for relevant studies. We also hand searched several journals and conference proceedings. The research criteria included relevant studies of ischaemic stroke patients and subjects with homocysteine measurement as well as case-control and cohort study design. The quality of the studies was independently assessed by three reviewers using the Downs & Black criteria. The association between homocysteine and the severity and characteristics of ischaemic stroke was investigated in 16 studies. High plasma homocysteine level was associated with the severity (odds ratio [OR] = 1.88, 95% confidence interval [CI] 1.22-2.92), risk of early death (OR = 3.33, 95% CI 2.12-5.24), and risk of ischaemic stroke rec
