What's new:

names? I am trying to get answers about "team names" on a sponsorship website - and I keep coming up against a brick wall. I can't find anything that is vaguely understandable on the role and the kind of people involved. Here is the deal - who all are a few of the names of the teams I have found and their roles (I have added names as needed where it is unclear):

Sponsorship Link - Event Organiser (admittedly my boss but also beside me)

-----Website Design-----

Are they "designing the website" and what do they do? (it's an online service) This is a little confusing - they sort of seem to be handling the servers/databases and making them work for the site owners.

Does anyone know more? ~~~ potatolicious The second team is a advertising team - they run advertisements for your site, other sites, and in some cases generate traffic to your site via search. Like any advertising campaign they may also design the ad to make it more prominent or target users on your target site, but this is not a major part of their job. The first team is probably event organizers. They are effectively in charge of managing the volunteers. In some cases they will contract that out, but the you or your boss were doing this. This is usually the hardest part of sponsoring a show. Getting the right mix of volunteers is critical to a good event. Often times volunteers forget they are there to volunteer, are paid instead of volunteer, or are not willing to put in the necessary time due to previous poor experience.

~~~ ed > _The second team is a advertising team - they run advertisements for your > site, other sites, and in some cases generate traffic to your site via > search. _ You're absolutely correct - those are the problem solvers. I recommend reading the ads they create first before you decide to sponsor a show. Give a show the traffic you'd like it to get so you can measure the success of your advertising investment, and make sure that they can actually provide the claimed effect. ~~~ potatolicious Good advice - and much of this is based on much larger shows than the "our first show" they were doing at the time (which they
