Q: How to incorporate UIButton into TableViewCell I'm new to the world of programming and I'm learning by myself. I managed to have the UITableView scroll to the bottom on my app whenever the user presses a button on a UITableViewCell. The way it works now is that whenever a button on a cell is pressed, a variable is set to true, and the UITableView scrolls to the bottom of the table. I would like to make it so that whenever a button is pressed, all of the other buttons in the row that are not currently pressed are also pressed, and the UITableView scrolls to the bottom. I have seen a lot of similar questions in this forum, but most of the answers are outdated and do not work for me. I have tried to implement them on my own, but as soon as I click the button again on the cell, the UITableViewController immediately scrolls the table back to the top. In addition, it would be very helpful if I could have all the buttons that were pressed at once reset to their original state when the cell is unselected. I have tried to make a solution that would work for this, but have 6d1f23a050
