The features announced today are part of Adobe Photoshop CC 2019, which is currently beta. Next month, Photoshop CC 2019 will be available generally in October. This is an ongoing software update program, with product releases every nine months. Adobe Design Advocate Brian Hoffmann¹ said: “Photoshop CC 2019 is the starting point for a more powerful and smarter Photoshop CC app, with some of the biggest changes to date, from powerful collaboration and multi-camera editing features, to new innovations that make editing and manipulating images on mobile devices easier than ever.” “We have made significant improvements to bringing the fidelity and detail of the latest hardware-accelerated features right into Photoshop, so our users can work smarter and faster,” said Amy Teeple, vice president of Photoshop, InDesign and After Effects. “As we developed these new features, we were constantly asking ourselves how we could make Photoshop even better, and we believe this is a ground-up shift for the way we think about Photoshop and the way we use it. We had to re-think the way we designed, build, and launch new features so we could take advantage of advances in hardware and make sure Photoshop CC would work well in the ways that Photoshop CC users expect it to. “While Photoshop CC 2019 is the current beta version, we already have several of the new features, including most of the organizational improvements, background fill, new headline tool and new one-click delete and edit, completed for testing and ready to be released to all Photoshop CC users this fall,” Hoffmann continued. “In addition, we’re in the early stages of development on an update to the research and development plug-in to accompany all the new features, which we will release later this fall. With Photoshop CC 2019, and later updates with new features and improvements, your creativity and professional productivity are the top priority.”

Bringing Photoshop to the web would also be a huge step forward. However, all things considered, it's been easier to solve all the hard problems on the web than it is to get web APIs to actually work correctly. We look forward to tackling these problems head on, and have something that you can actually use and trust to make you and your clients' web sites work small and large. Jason Nicholls on Twitter reads: "I love using Tone Curve and Channels as I am finally getting control over my contrast and colours without being limited to my current monitor. I was so relieved when it appeared." Hendrik Hünen, Entrepreneur on Twitter says about Tone Curve "The ideal tone curve for me is more like a S-Curve. It's much easier to grade your images when tonal values are below 0 and above 255. I've tried a Linear tone curve for a while and after a long while I think I need some Adaptive Tone Curve settings more..." The other day, I felt like a kid in a candy store. My brand new MacBook pro and Creative Cloud subscription had just arrived and was installed. At last, Adobe's powerful software and services have found their purrrfect place. Other than my MacBook pro I have now the Adobe Creative Suite installed, Photoshop, Illustrator, InDesign, Premiere Pro and After Effects. I used to feel a little intimidated by the bigger companies and their pricing. My main hurdle was to overcome my own feeling of being not good enough to justify my admission to their services. Digital is not a choice, it's a necessity. In the case of Adobe, it's a home run. Like I said it's a work of wonder.
